The receipts of bogs were over 1,200. Good hogs were scarce and buyers sorted pretty close. The market opened steady, but soon began to weaken and dropped 10 cents. Most of the days business was done after the decline as buyers would not take hold st yesterday's figures. There was considerable activity toward the last, as there was a desire to close out. A few choice hogs brought $1.60 early, but the bulk of sales was at $3.45.

"My dear Mrs. Lakely, anything to oblige you, but I don't know"—
"Oh, don't say so," interrupted the poor lady. "I have such confidence in your ability to straighten matters out for us. A day or two later this conversation re sulted in a visit from Bristed to the hote where Mrs. McPherson was temporarily registered. It was not in this young man's nature to look forward with much relish to the in-terview. He felt that he he' before him something extremely distasteful. It is even possible that he was inclined to take some credit to bimself when he reflected upon the trouble he was at to oblige his friend's family and to keep the boy himself from a piece of folly he should spend the rest of his life in regretting. But in another way he accounted himself repaid for anything he might do, even before it was done. For nothing could be sweeter or fairer or more charming than Cecilia Lakely, Horace's young sister.

She was a mere school girl, to be sure but Hurlburt Bristed admired the type An ingenuous young girl was to him the most delightful thing in nature. And he smiled often, as he took himself to Mrs. tain warm, shy giances which had fallen from those dovelike eyes these latter times since he had been exerting himself so much in her brother's behalf. In helping Horace he was really wooing in the surest way, if indirectly, the clustve flower of this young

He was still thinking of Cecilia as he sat waiting for Mrs. McPherson to appear. He was, indeed, so much engressed in his reveries that he looked up only when the larly he had come to see stood close in front of him. She had entered softly by a door at the side of him. As he rose a little confusedly she covered bim suddenly with

"But I do not—I am not sure"— "Do you mean," interjected the poor lady, holding herself very straight, her mien, in its outraged maternal pride, coming almost majestic, "that Mrs. Mc-Pherson is playing fast and loose with my son? That she would reject him at the last That Horace Lakely should marry such a person as McPherson's widow was horrible enough. But, that being so inclined, Mrs. Lakely's darling, her eldest born, her
